

Town Fathers Hold Session

Several Petitions, Supported By Numerous Ratepayers, Are Presented To Council; Town Nuisance To Be Abated Forthwith; Grant Of Land Made To Hospital Board For Site For New Building; Utility Policeman Now On The Job.

At the meeting of the Town Council on Friday last, when the Mayor and Councilors were all in attendance except Councilor Davidson, quite a large number of interested ratepayers were on hand to support several petitions which were placed on the table for consideration of "the powers that be."

Altogether it was an interesting session of our local government, and proved that matters of moment can be supported by the citizens at large when the personal interest is aroused.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read, and on motion adopted.

A largely signed petition was presented from the ratepayers petitioning that the present plan adopted by Council in the emptying of cesspools be remedied to the extent that the method and time should be changed so that the Tank should be kept in a state of repair to overcome any leakage during the transportation of the contents to the nuisance ground thereby overcoming the existing unpleasantness that has been experienced in the past.

Knowles-Forster—That in view of the extensively signed petition, re unsatisfactory conditions pertaining to the handling of cesspools, we would recommend that in order to meet with the requirements, as demanded that an extra team and equipment be purchased and placed on this work exclusively, the other work to be carried on as heretofore by present team. In the meantime an extra team to be placed on this work temporarily to empty cesspools at night.—Amended.

Moved in amendment by Councilor Welch, seconded by Councilor Lissimore, that the petition re emptying of cesspools be referred to committee on Public Works and Scavenging for further report.—Carried.

A petition from the Wainwright Municipal Hospital Board, supported in the absence of the Chairman, by Mr. J. Cuthbertson, was presented to Council asking that Block 105, Plan 890 A, J. be granted them for the purpose of a Hospital site.

Lissimore-Telford—That the petition from Hospital Board be laid on table for discussion under new business.—Carried.

A petition from the officers of the C.N.R. Social club, supported by Messrs Pickard, Wiley and Gano, was presented to Council asking that the rental of that portion of the Rink Building known as the C.N.R. Social club rooms be reduced from $15.00 per month to $10.00 per month.

Lissimore-Telford—That the rental of the upstairs portion of the Rink Building occupied as club room by C.N.R. Social club be reduced from $15.00 to $10.00 per month, same to take effect dating from November 1st 1926.—Carried.

The Committee on Public Works and Scavenging reported as follows: "That work in this department has been carried on as usual with the necessity from time to time of the hiring of an extra man for the work of striding and fixing streets and sidewalks."

At the present time an extra man has been engaged to attend to the cesspools at night, in order to let the regular employee and team give his full time to other sanitary duties, preparatory to putting this work in shape before the final freezeup.

Knowles-Forster—That the report of the Public Works and Scavenging Committee be adopted.—Carried.

The By-law committee reported presenting a draft for a By-law regulating and governing the installation for natural gas and to fix and determine the several materials to be used.

Lissimore-Telford—That this Council resolve itself into a committee of the whole to take into consideration the application of the Hospital Board, and also to consider the By-law governing the installation etc. for natural gas.—Carried.

The Council resolved itself into a Committee with the Mayor in the Chair.

The Committee on rising reported as follows:

We your Committee of the Whole beg leave to report as follows:—That we recommend that Block one hundred and five (105), Plan 890 A, J. G.T.P. townsite, providing it meets the approval of the Minister of Health be transferred to the Municipal Hospital Board, for the sum of one dollar, same to remain the property of the Board as long as used for hospital purposes.

We further recommend that a special meeting be called by the Mayor to take into consideration the by-law governing the installation of natural gas.

Welch-Knowles—That the report of the Committee of the Whole be adopted.—Carried.

Several tenders having been submitted to Council for the installation of natural gas into the town buildings and also the electric power plant, it was moved by Coun. Forster seconded by Coun. Knowles that a special meeting be called by the Mayor to take into consideration the different tenders in connection with the installation.—Carried.

The several applications for general utility man and police officer having been placed before Council, it was moved:

Knowles-Welch—That the application of Joseph Rogers Cameron be accepted, and that the party be notified that this position of utility man and officer of the law is open to him for the period of one month, his services to be continued monthly if satisfaction is given.—Carried.

Lissimore-Telford—That Councilor Davidson be appointed Deputy-Mayor for the ensuing three months.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned.

CALGARY EDITOR WOULD SEEK NEW SETTLERS IN EUROPE

Charles W. Peterson, of Calgary editor of the Farm and Ranch Review speaking before the Empire Club at Toronto, said that it was time for action in immigration matters and that the people of Canada have focused their propaganda on Great Britain with its more handful of rural people and upon Northern Europe, with its highly prosperous agriculture, where the best hope of obtaining permanent settlers for Canada lay in the Central European peasant.

With a natural increase of 2 1/2 per cent per annum on the 1870 population of 3,372,000, added to 640,000 gained during 1881 and 1926 by immigration, Canada should now have a population of sixteen million instead of nine, the remainder having been lost to other countries, notably to the United States, Mr. Peterson said.

POOL WHEAT TO WEST THIS YEAR'S MOVEMENT

WINNIPEG.—Consolidate wheat pool officials in session at Winnipeg yesterday discussed conditions and prospects of the colonial co-operative organization. The chief executives are in agreement that prices for pool grain will not be disappointing generally, nor the quantity, though failure to secure bottoms on the east coast for export of just now are disappointing. Large volumes, however, are going to Europe via the western route, in consequence of lack of facilities at Montreal. Geo. McIvor, sales manager for the Alberta pool, who has just returned from the Orient in the interests of the organization, is present and reports prospects for Canadian grain in China and Japan as improving.

CARL FORSTER LOSES FINGER AT OIL DERRICK

Very early Monday morning last, Mr. Carl Forster who is employed on one of the night gangs at the Dome drilling site, had the sad misfortune to get his right hand caught in some rigging up aloft on the derrick, with the result that he had the top of the middle finger of his right hand cut cleanly off. As soon as he gave the alarm to those below, the machinery was stopped, and upon Carl coming to the derrick floor it was seen that the accident might prove serious and Dr. Wallace was sent for. It was then found that although another finger was badly smashed it can be saved and under the doctor's care the patient is progressing nicely.

ALBERTA RESOURCES LEGISLATION HELD UP PENDING PROBE

OTTAWA.—The justice department is taking steps to proceed with the reference to the supreme court with regard to the constitutionality of the Alberta Autonomy Act insofar as it relates to school funds from school lands. The case, however, will not come up before the winter sitting of the court, unless a special hearing is arranged meanwhile.

It is considered very improbable that the projected legislation, returning to the province its natural resources will be proceeded with until the court decides on this question and if, as is very possible, its judgment is appealed to the privy council by one side or the other, further delay would seem likely.

The government here, in returning the resources, would perpetuate the present effect of the Autonomy Act regarding school funds and lands while the province, in accepting the resources, wants no sting attached to the case at law will hinge upon the point whether, in creating the province, it was within the legislative competence of the Dominion parliament to put in a provision with regard to educational matters or whether such ought to have been left to the new provinces for their own determination.

On Friday last, Fire-chief Richardson and Cons. Bond, A.P.P. put the kiddies through a fire drill at the schools and their performance was truly remarkable. The buildings were all cleared in record time, and the action of the youngsters through the drill was splendid.

ROCK PILES ARE ABANDONED IN JAIL DELIVERY

A general jail delivery, in which hundreds of ball-and-chain convicts effect a get-away, is one of the exciting and diverting episodes in "Tramp Tramp, Tramp," the new Harry Lang comedy showing at the theatre on Friday and Saturday next.

Harry is one of the prisoners who make good his escape. The comedian was set to work on the rock-pile after having been caught red-handed with a quantity of stolen fruit.

(Having developed an appetite through participating in a transcontinental hike, the moon faced comedian plucked fruit from the wayside fruit farmers captured him.)

Though search revealed a watermelon under his shirt.

In the subsequent delivery Harry hasn't the time to cut himself loose from his ball-and-chain and continues on his long walk with this heavy impediment.

"Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," is an original story by Langdon. The comedian has had the theme in mind for many years.

Harry Edwards directed and the cast includes Joan Crawford, Tom Murray, Edwards Davis, Alec Francis and Brooks Benedict.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Dixon, and family were over from Hugenford for the week and on a visit to Mr. A. Alexander.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE LAST FRONTIER SHOWING COMPLETED

According to a bulletin issued by the makers of "The Last Frontier," which was filmed here, it is an excellent frontier day melodrama, in which the Buffalo makes an excellent feature. The scenes are caused by the several fierce fights between Indians and whites. The numbers of Indians used in the battle scenes, photographed from vantage points, make the scenes deeply impressive. The large herds of buffalo used, too, add impressiveness to the stampede which takes place towards the end, as is thrilling as any cattle stampede that has been seen in any picture in the past; with the hero and heroine standing in the open, the buffaloes are seen rushing towards them. Death seems certain but for the presence of mind of the hero who divides the stampeding buffaloes by shooting into the middle of the herd.

There is a strong love interest. Great anxiety is felt for the safety of the hero, the heroine and all the townsfolk, including the army post, because of the villain's machinations.

It is hoped to have showing dates here on this big feature picture within the next two or three weeks.

William Boyd makes an excellent hero and Marguerite De La Motte a charming heroine. Jack Hoxie impersonates Buffalo Bill successfully. Young Coulthart, a boy about ten years old, does very good work. The story has been directed skillfully by George B. Seitz from the story by Courtney Ryley Cooper; it has been adapted intelligently by Will M. Richter.

Immediately after the Civil War the heroine, her father and her mother move west to meet the hero to whom she is engaged. On the way the train attacked by the Indians and the heroine's mother and father are killed. When they reach town the heroine blames the hero for the death of her parents. The hero tries to make up with her but she refuses because of the skilled opposition of the villain who coveted the heroine. The Indians prepare for an attack; corralled all the buffaloes of the region and making them stampede towards the towns, the Indians follow. But their plans are foiled by the timely arrival of scouts and of the army. The hero saves the heroine from the stampeding buffaloes. The villain is trampled to death. The heroine learns what were the intentions of the villain who had deceived her to follow him East, and how nobly the hero fought for her. Hero and heroine become reconciled.

Some of the many big thrilling scenes in "The Last Frontier" are those of the Canadian Government Buffalo herds in Wainwright Park. Had it not been for the whitehearted co-operation of the Wainwright Park Officials these tremendous Buffalo Scenes would have been impossible.

ACCIDENT WITH DITCHER HINDERS SEVERAL HOURS

The big ditching machine, which is putting in the trenches for the gas installation, met with a set-back last Thursday when at the back of the Washburn Hardware it encountered a big hole into which it nearly sank. This was caused by the plank head of one of the old village "fire tanks" breaking through from the extreme weight. Luckily the machine only got down on one front wheel, and Mr. Dowd, who has had similar experience before soon had the machine safely propped. After the filling of the old tank with big rocks, the ditcher "walked right out" and is again on duty as heretofore.

BEN. KARMAN IS BACK FROM JAUNT WITH HIS BRIDE

Congratulations are being showered upon another of our town merchants the fact of his joining the ranks of the benedicts, this time, Mr. Ben. Karmann and his bride being the recipients of the good wishes. The Parkersburg (W. Va.) Sentinel of last week carried the following story of the happy affair:

Miss Aune Duckworth of Greenwood, W. Va., daughter of Mrs. James Duckworth and a sister of Mr. J. H. Duckworth of Beaver street was united in marriage to B. W. Karmann, on Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock at the residence of the First United Brethren church, Rev. J. W. Knight performed the impressive rite ceremony which was witnessed by a group of relatives and friends. The bride was charming in a lovely gown of pink crepe with which she wore a large black velvet picture hat and correspondingly accessories. Following the marriage service the bridal party returned to the Duckworth residence where a handsomely appointed family dinner was served. The table was beautifully laid and decorated with pink dahlias and greenery and an elaborate menu was served.

The bride and groom will leave this evening for Greenwood, W. Va. to spend a few days with the former's mother before leaving for Alberta. Canada where Mr. Karmann is successfully engaged in the shoe business. The happy couple will be followed to their new home by the good wishes of many friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Karmann arrived back home on Sunday's train.

Education And Better Schools

The following paper on the above vital subject was given at the monthly meeting of the W.L. by Mrs. A. Patterson, and is surely worthy of deep study as a means of betterment and uplift for the rising generation:— "Education and Better Schools help to fulfill the proverb 'Happy is the man that getteth understanding.'"

All citizens of any country must be educated so they may wisely govern themselves and uplift their country.

ANNEXATION IS BOGEY SAYS TASCHEREAU

LONDON.—"Never so long as there is a French-Canada will there be annexation of Canada by the United States," declared Premier Taschereau of Quebec to the British United Press.

"I don't believe there is any real movement in that direction. There are three million French-Canadians in Canada, and they are a very happy lot. They have much love for British institutions, where we have found liberty in everything we cherish. I believe we are the most free people in the world," said Premier Taschereau.

GOLDEN COCOON
RUTH CROSS

"The Golden Cocoon" with Helen Chadwick is a picturization of this novel by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.
Copyright, 1926, by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

"I see—you want money?"
Molly had been watching him in the mirror—with revulsion and pity and a certain deep sadness. There was more here than drink, more even than mental and moral disintegration. Those could not have worked so swiftly. Trembling hands, twitching muscles, the glassy film overspreading at times the mocking, dark eyes, told another story. Whisky was hard to get.

"She glanced around the ferns to make sure Eldredge was not yet in sight. Then she said: 'Stephen, I'm sorry. I have a great deal of money, but I'd do anything I could to help you—not because of your threats, but for the memory of an old and once beautiful illusion. For the rest, you don't imagine anybody would publish such a story on the mere word of a waiter in a restaurant, do they?'"

"The ironic drop at his lip changed to a sneer, almost to a snarl. If he tries to marry this woman, you'll soon find out whether they'll publish it or not! Drug addict or not, evidence is evidence."

"I think you'd better go now," Molly suggested, as she saw Eldredge crossing the room.

Eldredge, who was in the midst of explaining what had kept him, broke off abruptly. "What's up? Seen a ghost?"

Molly nodded. "Let's go home," she said.

CHAPTER XXX

When he had gone, she telephoned at once to the railroad station. The next train for Washington left within the hour. Then she changed her dress and put a few things into a bag—ordered a taxi. Her mind had been already made up. She was going to Greg.

How many times she had been on the verge of it before, how sorely she had been tempted! Now that she was actually going, it seemed absurdly simple and commonplace. She was going to Washington, to see Greg.

She kept saying the words over and over to herself, trying to realize their meaning. Going to Washington—going to Greg.

She arrived in the early morning. She strolled incuriously around the Capitol and the public buildings until the hour when she thought his office might be open.

When she entered the modest waiting-room—Cochran's office was not in one of the official buildings—she found it filled already so overflowing. A courteous but firm secretary advised her that her turn would not come until the day after tomorrow. Molly said she would wait. All that day she waited—and the next.

At a few minutes before closing time on the second day the secretary beckoned to her. Some official had been unable to keep his appointment. He could be brief—verboosness wouldn't help her with Mr. Cochran away. This with a smile, as one who gives a friendly tip. Perhaps he felt sorry for her because she had waited so long.

The secretary was holding the door open for her—a trifle impatiently. She crossed the threshold. The door closed behind her.

"Won't you be seated?" the man at the desk said, without looking up. He was jotting down some memoranda or other on a pad.

Molly sank into the chair nearest the desk, and he went on writing, oblivious at once of her presence—of her very existence. Five years, yet how little he was changed—a sprinkling of silver in the bronze hair, the face a little more reserved, more careworn, perhaps, the lines cut deeper. But not so changed—surely not so changed as she, or he must have recognized her at once, even through the veil, even without looking up. She would have recognized him—he could not have come into a room without her knowing it.

She was so close she could have leaned across and touched him. She could have whispered, "Greg, look at me. I am Molly, and I love you."

But that was not what she had come to say. She had to keep reminding herself of that.

Greg there so near—oh, so dangerously near, and yet . . . A treacherous, hot rush of tears against the veil required at that moment all her attention.

Presently Cochran shoved back the pad and turned with the deliberate, cumbersome movement she knew so well. "And what can I do for you, Miss?" he paused to consult the card before him—Bayne . . . "Margaret Bayne" was the paraphrase of her great-grandmother's name, which Molly had chosen to use.

She did not answer at once. The few simple words when finally she brought them out took all the courage an had ever noted in. Molly began to doubt, herself, if she were really there. Perhaps it was only another of the dreams that had tormented and mocked her. But that scene—It seemed and another came before her—that last day when she had gone to fetch him from the office, when she had straightened the offending collar and made it an excuse to kiss him. Perhaps if she were not here?

Was it possible he had forgotten? She pulled down her veil with uncertain fingers, got to her feet. Cochran turned. The woman gave her a little friendly, inquiring smile. She was nice, unspoiled and kind.

"Oh, Miss Bayne—Mrs. Whitman," Cochran presented them. "Miss Bayne you know, is a very good friend of Myron Eldredge, the dramatic critic. You remember we met him at a dinner in New York."

"Of course." The other woman offered her hand with a quick, friendly gesture.

Miss Bayne has been kind enough to offer to write some articles for us.

After a time, somehow, Molly got out. She stumbled into a waiting elevator. In the lobby below she found Myron Eldredge. Not until hours afterward did it occur to her that she was there.

He put her into a taxi, gave some order to the driver. After a time she told him incoherently, a little here and a little there—everything. It was mercy and salvation to have him tell it to—be able to talk about him.

"You must let me go to him," he said at last. "You see, you didn't really explain everything."

"If couldn't—he wouldn't let me," she said. "I'm the logical one to do it, any- how. He's probably jealous as the devil."

Molly shook her head. "No, he's not jealous. He's not anything. For him I simply don't exist, that's all. Besides this other woman—"

"Don't you see how it would look—like a dog in the manger—as if I'd only come back to stop him from marrying her? No, I shall never tell him. Any way, it doesn't matter about me. I want only his happiness."

"And I want only what is for your happiness."

"I know," she laid her hands for a moment over his. "I can't think what I should have done if you hadn't come."

CHAPTER XXXI

It was not until she was saying good-by to Eldredge at the station in New York some weeks later that she remembered to tell him just how much his coming had meant. There was something beautiful and rare about this affection which had sprung up from not the most promising of beginnings.

Eldredge had done everything in his power to induce her to let him act as mediator between her and Cochran to bring about some basis of understanding if not of reconciliation. Having failed, he held his conscience

WASTE BY FIRE IS UNREDEEMABLE!

At this time of the year we are all more or less feeling the "chilly" change of atmosphere, and for that reason are inclined possibly to exhibit an indifference to the need of extra caution with regard to "getting on a quick fire" in the mornings, or banking up at night. This of course a matter of want of thought rather than sheer carelessness; although in too many instances the aftermath proves the same—a big fire loss.

In every phase of our economic social life the effects of this indifference are manifest. The burning of factories throws men out of work by thousands every month, and they have to seek other channels of employment. Even more serious is the appalling loss of life by fire. Between three and four hundred persons were burnt to death last year in Canada, and to that awful death roll must be added the hundreds more who were maimed and injured from the effects of this devastating element while unchecked.

Ninety per cent of the fire loss is preventable, because most fires are caused by carelessness and ignorance. Four practical suggestions that every one can adopt, unquestionably would result in an appreciable reduction of our annual fire loss:

First, let us insist upon clean premises and a clean town. Every neglected pile of rubbish is a fire breeder, and disorder is invariably a sign of fire hazard. Fire prevention, like charity, begins at home, so let's get busy and clean up our own homes and business places. Again, like charity, fire prevention is not content to stay at home, it must embrace the entire community. When we have worked at our own salvation, let us see what we can do to promote the idea amongst our friends and associates. This is the first law of fire prevention.

Second, let us learn to recognize and correct the more common fire hazards. There are about nine fire causes that if given attention, would wipe out half of our fires. In this country, for example, we strike about 100,000,000 matches a day, and smoke enough cigars and cigarettes in twenty-four hours to stretch five hundred miles. It is placed end to end. Here are two potential hazards to be constantly borne in mind. Then there are defective stoves and furnace flues and pipes, defective electric wiring, overheated stoves, carelessness with gasoline and defective coal oil stoves, careless use with coal oil lamps, sparks from dirty chimneys and carelessness with rubbish fires in the open. The list is not long for memorizing. If we make it a part of our daily thought it may be the means of preserving our homes from destruction.

Third, let us support wholeheartedly all fire prevention efforts in our community. Cities, towns and villages everywhere in Canada need better building laws, and proper ordinances for the removal of fire hazards and for the correction of dangerous conditions in buildings. Most of them need better equipped fire departments and officials empowered to regularly inspect premises. It is to the interest of everyone to urge public action in respect to these things and so help to improve conditions in the communities in which they live.

Fourth, and most vital of all, let us see that the rising generation is trained in safety habits. Fire prevention lessons are being taught in thousands of schools throughout Canada this week. Such lessons should form part of the regular syllabus. Fifteen minutes a week devoted to the study of fire prevention will be sufficient to impress its lesson indelibly upon the minds of the young. And children when trained, become not only watchful of their own habits but most effective tutors of their parents.

OUR TOWN SANITATION.

It was truly a step in the right direction last week, when, in answer to a largely signed petition, the Town Council decided that the emptying of the cesspools should be done during the night-time hours. This is a matter which has been too long delayed and upon which, all an sundry have had most decided opinions during the past few months, from the fact that only on odd days could one walk the streets of our town without being greeted with the awful stench associated with the cleaning out of the cesspools right in the middle of the business portion of town.

There have been possibly in the past good reasons why the increased expenditure now to be necessarily incurred could hardly be sanctioned; but any town setting out to become a worthwhile place to live in, to attract others to, is in duty bound to make the most of its opportunities for attractiveness, and not to discount its advantages in such a manner as has too long been allowed (and put up with) in the matter of the obsolete sanitary methods employed in Wainwright heretofore.

In the case of the house toilets also, there is surely room for improvement. Some time since, the Council passed the bylaw regarding the installation of the cement pits and the obligatory installation of the same but yet we are given to understand that even at this late date there are numerous places in town which have not yet complied with the mandate. This is not as it should be, but there can be no doubt that as soon as the new police officer (appointed last week) gets down to business, this matter will be looked into, and the defects remedied.

ON most farms the hens and other poultry are the special care of the farmer's wife, and the money that comes from this source is regarded as her own.

AUTOMOBILE LICENSES IN ALBERTA NUMBER 63,000

With more than 63,000 automobile licenses issued in Alberta this year, and applications still trickling in at the rate of a dozen a day, the 1925 mark has already been exceeded by 10,000 and indications are that 1927 will break all records.

Officials in the auto license branch estimate that at least 70,000 licenses will be issued in 1927, with every possibility of this number being exceeded. They believe that the wet August and September this year slowed up this year's business considerably and are looking for a big increase next year.

In 1925 there were 53,000 licenses issued.

NATURAL GAS IS BOON TO CHINOOK SUGAR FACTORY

The coming of natural gas to Chinook meant a big saving to the Utah-Idaho Sugar company's factory.

The plant formerly used from 145 to 240 tons of coal a day and had 12 stokers. With gas, the company uses between three and five million cubic feet of gas a day and has only one fireman.

Chinook had a celebration Saturday night because of the advent of gas in the Blaine county seat. Hardrock Oil company is piping the gas from Bowes structure.

GRAIN

Thrashing in a good many places in the province was held up from Sunday till Tuesday, but it is reported that they are hard at it again now. Recent statements by prominent grain men were to effect that grain is testing much drier than was at first anticipated, and it is believed that it will be about the same as last year, with the grade running higher. Most of it is grading No. 3 northern, but there is also a good sprinkling of No. 2 northern.

BUTTER, BUTTER, CHEESE

BUTTERFAT—With the continuance of harvesting, only light receipts are being handled by the creameries. No change has been made in prices during the past week. CREAMERY BUTTER—No change in local quotations reported while market is quiet. Coast trade slow, having a good supply of Saskatchewan butter on hand. Montreal price is 31½¢ for No. 1 pasteurized; Toronto prices lie over that of Montreal. DAIRY BUTTER—Receipts have been very light lately as farmers have not the time to spare to market supplies. Large percentage of butter handled from country grocers is grading low, going to bakeries. Fancy table quoted at 35¢; No. 1 32¢; and No. 2 18¢ to 22¢. CHEESE—No change is reported in this market.

POULTRY—EGGS

POULTRY—Receipts during past week have been fairly liberal, but with a good demand supplies are not hard to clean up. Chicken and fowls are comparatively good condition although some of them could stand a little more fattening. Old rooster trade very slow. Young cockerels are bringing from 14¢ to 16¢ and there seems to be an active trade for them. A few shipments have been made of heavy birds to Vancouver and Revelstoke where trade is active. EGGS—Very few fresh eggs handled on local markets, as hens have quit laying. Price ranges anywhere from 35¢ to 45¢. Storage values advanced since last report. Extras quoted at $12.90; first $11.70 and seconds $9.30. Approximately 90 to 95 per cent of trade being handled by storage stocks.

POTATOES

Since the weather has cleared up a little, it has given potato growers a better chance to market their tubers and also give the spuds time to dry out a little with the result that the receipts have been fairly heavy and carry less mud during the past week. Quotations at $20 to $22.50 per ton delivered to the jobber. Very little damage from frost reported. B.C. spuds are held by wholesalers at $35 to $40 per ton. Vancouver spuds bringing from $37 to $38 per ton.

FURS

Unchanged conditions prevail in this market.

WOOL

At country point price ranges from 16¢ to 17¢, delivered to the dealer in the city 17 to 17½¢. Volume not large but handling a little each day.

EDUCATION AND

BETTER SCHOOLS

SUBJECT W.I. PAPER

After many rural pupils complete Grade VIII, they desire higher education. This has become quite a problem. Parents are forced to send their children away from home to a neighboring town or city. This is too expensive for many. Parents do not care about having their children in strange homes while at the age when home influence is so valuable and necessary. Now, some urban school boards will not accept non-resident pupils. All this means that rural people must attack the problem and work out a suitable solution for themselves. The only attempts in the province worthy of study are the ordinary consolidated schools, and the consolidation of rural districts for high school purposes. There are two consolidated high schools in Alberta—one at Irma and the other at Fleet. Here five or six ordinary districts join together to provide high school work while still maintaining their elementary schools as before. We do not know if this will be the ultimate solution of this problem but it must be solved by rural people and this experiment should be carefully studied.

Very frequently we hear that young people in the country have too few opportunities for social life, and that entertainment provided is too limited in scope. Surely here is a chance for the Institutes to be of real help. Programmes of great variety are prepared by the Department of Extension of the University while lecturers can be secured through schools of Agriculture and the Executive of the Institute. Even if only in a small way it would be a splendid idea if we tried to provide some variety in our rural social gatherings this winter.

Recently there has come into being an organization which has done much to improve working conditions in the schools. Namely: The Parent Teacher's Association. The name is self-explanatory. Parents and teachers meet at regular intervals to plan for the betterment of the school in which both are interested. Such an organization may not be feasible in the small town or country. The Institute might easily arrange a meeting at which the programme would give opportunity for a discussion of school affairs. If all have at heart a genuine desire to improve conditions, such a meeting will produce good results.

One of the greatest handicaps is the lack of teacher's help.

The United States, the Recreation Association of America maintaining Community service (315-4th Ave., New York), is an invaluable clearing house for all that is best in the line of playground and social work, dramatic, seasonal programmes, etc. These are at the service of the Canadian teacher but do not help in problems peculiar to her work.

Where can she secure information on the making of the flag, or rules governing its usage? Who can supply Canadian Literature for Canadian Book Week? Where can she get suitable material for the annual Christmas Concert, including the old carols good literature, plays which stress the spirit of Christmas and the spirit of giving, etc. The obtaining of these helps would do much to form in the children the love of the best music and literature; to counteract the spirit of getting and to develop sound ideals and character. Branches of the Institute could do some of their most valuable work by trying to gather together all the above mentioned material available. In every branch of the Institute some one is almost certain to know of at least one valuable publication. The title author, publisher address and price could be sent to the Provincial Convener. Should we compile something worth while in teacher's helps it will be an excellent contribution to the cause of better education.

Education and Better Schools would be greatly benefited if all branches of the Institute endeavored to do their best in working upon the objectives drawn up for this year.

Namely 1.—An increase of at least 10% in the number of pupils in each constituency to complete the work of Grade VIII.
2.—No school within the sphere of influence of any Institute to fall below 75% in average attendance, nor operate less than 160 days during the year 1926-27, and a general increase in average attendance over last year from 2 to 5%.

3.—The general use throughout rural schools of the promotion tests for Grades V, VI & VII.

4.—The stimulation of thought and discussion on the part of rural people on the subject of high school education for rural girls and boys, including a study of the plan in practice at Irma and Fleet.

5.—Provision for suitable programs for meetings of young people no longer in school during the fall and winter months. Greater use of the facilities offered by the Extension Dept. of the University. Services of the schools of Agriculture, and speakers which the executive of the Institute may be able to secure.

6.—Encouragement, where ever feasible, of the organization of Parent-Teacher Association.

7.—Compilation of a bibliography of sources of free or inexpensive teacher's helps.

5. A map of the world showing the various positions held all over by the Empress of Scotland.
6. Canadian Pacific flag ship Empress of Scotland which carried the Governor-General to Canada.

Their Excellencies Viscount and Viscountess Willingdon made many friends on their voyage from England to Quebec on board the Canadian Pacific flag ship Empress of Scotland, when His Lordship came here in October to become Governor-General of the Dominion. They paid visits to all parts of the vessel chatting with new settlers for Canada and presiding at the various functions that take place aboard ship during an ocean voyage. Sharing their popularity was their Cairn Terrier, Missy, who was friends with everyone except perhaps a plump Chow who looked to him as though he might develop into a dangerous rival.

Canada's thirteenth Governor-General had a fine reception when she docked at Quebec. He struck a careful note when he told his French-Canadian audience he too could claim descent from the Normans and that French blood flowed in his veins equally as in theirs. "In this country," he said, "the descendants of our two races have worked for many years under the British Crown for a common purpose and object, namely, to promote the welfare and prosperity of the people of this wonderful country."

First impressions are vital in establishing successful relations and perhaps no impression gave so cordial an effect as one of His Lordship's speeches aboard the Empress of Scotland, which was broadcast all over Canada. In it he said: "I wonder if I may venture to add one word of rather an intimate and personal character. It is this—in wishing all my fellow-passengers the best of good luck in the future and all health and happiness they can possibly expect and obtain, I ask them one and all to give an occasional thought—a kindly thought—to one who is about to undertake very great responsibilities for the British Empire in the great Dominion of Canada."

That is the true democratic note, sounded with modesty and feeling and sure of an unreserved response throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

clear. He had hoped that she would come back from this absurd pilgrimage at least resigned, ready to take what life still held for her and make the best of it.

"Two are better than one," you know," he reminded her in the last half minute before the train pulled out. His mouth twisted a little with the effort to keep it casual and humorous. "For if they fall the one will lift up his fellow, but woe to him that is alone when he falleth."

Molly bent forward and put both her hands over her eyes. "Myron, I can't count myself alone when I have a friend like you. You've lifted me up times without number—picked up the places and put them together again."

He cranked the handle between his legs and got to his feet. The train was beginning to move. It's all right," he said with another abrupt, hurtful pressure of her hands took himself off.

Her last glimpse of him was from the train window—head bare, smiling and waving to her—that veiled boyish eagerness in the ironic, old young eyes, the seamed and corded old young face. It cut to the heart somehow—she was really fond of him.

Molly was going home—home—not to Laws' Chapel, but to her native state, the Capitol, the university the Gothic spires Stephen had maled.

Stephen—she shuddered away from eyes not less blue than the flowers Stephen had paid his debt, if debt he owed. Eldredge had chanced on his name in a column of hundred dead. It seemed he had found work in an ammunition factory—some fastidious technique perhaps of self-respect, some genuine shame at her having seen him as a waiter, a flunky in uniform. There had been an explosion. Such things were constantly happening now. She had resisted the impulse to send the clipping to Grace—on the eve of sailing again for France. Eldredge had brought her this information, too, information not true, an outlet, an expression of trust, of course, to the newspapers.

Once across the border into her own state, her heart stirred faintly to great stretches of black-land prairie with the corn showing new and sketchily green; to oil derricks bristling on every hand like a particularly dusky variety of cactus; to blue bonnets sheathing hill and plain with dazzling, far-flung scarfs of lapis lazuli; to sand and heat and yellow April sunshine; to ugly little towns with the assembled populations crowded round the ugly, yellow-buff station to watch the Limited go through.

What struck her most as she stepped at last from the train at the little red brick capital station was that everything seemed so unchanged. It was like an enchanted city, drowsing in the late afternoon sun—the Avenue, the Capitol, the Mansion; the Gothic spires—waiting, perhaps for her return.

The campus was changing most of all. Several fine new buildings, a dozen sprawling, wooden shacks, huddled the bluebonnets, once undisturbed April monarchs, into pitifully cramped quarters. They were there though, still—thousands of quaint white little blue hoods, nodding and swaying to the wind, plundering greedy herds of pollen-gilded bees Molly waded out halfway to her knees in them, glanced round, dropped quickly to the ground. She smothered her face in the blossoms, pressed her lips to the fragrant, warm earth beneath. Her earth. . . She remembered that other homecoming so long ago. Autumn it had been—and how she had longed to stoop and kiss the earth beneath her feet.

The sun hid itself over behind the Gothic towers and the Southern dusk did cool, scented penance for the heat and burden of the day. A slim new moon lifted its silver horn above the chapel's ivied buttresses, and still Molly lingered on—to think and to dream. The past rushed over her like the first deep whiff of ether, bore her down, blotted out new landmarks. Faces, voices, scenes—some long forgotten. She thought of Mrs. Parker Mrs. Parker with her little pine-knot body, her humor-wrinkled face, her heart of gold—gone long since to her reward. A rich and generous reward it must be.

She thought of her mother in the faded calico wrapper, thrusting back the damp tendrils from her face with the worn, harassed motion. Her mother—she had spent herself, her youth her strength, her very bone and blood to bring them forth. She had shriveled and fallen into dust like a dried seed pod after the seeds are scattered. And what had they done for her? Nothing, nothing at all.

She thought of her father, bland and benignant in his unpaid for pine coffin—of Larry.

On the Avenue, she had noted a handsome black-and-gold sign, "Lettered," Judge Jack Laramie Shannon. She had passed and re-passed it—lingeringly; old ties, old affections straining fiercely at her heart. But no, it was better not—better always the dead should remain dead, better the ghostly should not intrude their ghostliness the living. He was prosperous, successful—with a position to be maintained, no doubt. There might be bitterness and recrimination, the old flame of intolerance breaking out. Strange they had all been like that deep down, perhaps, affection, but a little surface reacting on one another like vitriol and corrosive sublimate. Strange that the mildest and gentlest of women should have brought forth worms. For if they fall the one will lift up his fellow, but woe to him that is alone when he falleth.

Stephen—the thought of him persisted too. Stephen strolling round the corner at dusk with his inimitable Jesuitlike smile. Stephen smiling at her spindly God-out-of-the-machine smile, Stephen glorious and beautiful to her as a god. Stephen in flunky's uniform, hurrying to help get to his feet. The train was beginning to move. It's all right," he said with another abrupt, hurtful pressure of her hands took himself off.

Her last glimpse of him was from the train window—head bare, smiling and waving to her—that veiled boyish eagerness in the ironic, old young eyes, the seamed and corded old young face. It cut to the heart somehow—she was really fond of him.

Molly was going home—home—not to Laws' Chapel, but to her native state, the Capitol, the university the Gothic spires Stephen had maled.

Stephen—she shuddered away from eyes not less blue than the flowers Stephen had paid his debt, if debt he owed. Eldredge had chanced on his name in a column of hundred dead. It seemed he had found work in an ammunition factory—some fastidious technique perhaps of self-respect, some genuine shame at her having seen him as a waiter, a flunky in uniform. There had been an explosion. Such things were constantly happening now. She had resisted the impulse to send the clipping to Grace—on the eve of sailing again for France. Eldredge had brought her this information, too, information not true, an outlet, an expression of trust, of course, to the newspapers.

Once across the border into her own state, her heart stirred faintly to great stretches of black-land prairie with the corn showing new and sketchily green; to oil derricks bristling on every hand like a particularly dusky variety of cactus; to blue bonnets sheathing hill and plain with dazzling, far-flung scarfs of lapis lazuli; to sand and heat and yellow April sunshine; to ugly little towns with the assembled populations crowded round the ugly, yellow-buff station to watch the Limited go through.

What struck her most as she stepped at last from the train at the little red brick capital station was that everything seemed so unchanged. It was like an enchanted city, drowsing in the late afternoon sun—the Avenue, the Capitol, the Mansion; the Gothic spires—waiting, perhaps for her return.

The campus was changing most of all. Several fine new buildings, a dozen sprawling, wooden shacks, huddled the bluebonnets, once undisturbed April monarchs, into pitifully cramped quarters. They were there though, still—thousands of quaint white little blue hoods, nodding and swaying to the wind, plundering greedy herds of pollen-gilded bees Molly waded out halfway to her knees in them, glanced round, dropped quickly to the ground. She smothered her face in the blossoms, pressed her lips to the fragrant, warm earth beneath. Her earth. . . She remembered that other homecoming so long ago. Autumn it had been—and how she had longed to stoop and kiss the earth beneath her feet.
